VICTORIA ADE-GENSCHOW
MA Education

VICTORIA IS NOW A SCHOOL VICE-PRINCIPAL AND THE CORPORATE ENGLISH MANAGER OF A GERMAN ORGANISATION THAT PROVIDES QUALITY INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION AND OTHER EDUCATIONAL SERVICES IN THE PROFESSIONAL SECTOR.

After gaining experience in roles such as Head Teacher and Life Coach, Victoria decided to return to education and undertake a Master's to broaden her horizons. Her MA in Education was part-time and catered for senior professionals who work in teaching or training.

Throughout her course, Victoria lived abroad and regularly commuted to Chester from Germany to attend classes and use the University's facilities. She praised the small and intimate nature of the classes, with most modules geared towards leadership and management.

Victoria is also the Editor-in-Chief of the international lifestyle and travel blog – The British Berliner. She has been featured in various publications such as The Independent and The Huffington Post.

Doing a Master's not only gives you higher credence as an authority in your field and respect among your peers, it also opens your eyes to a critical understanding of the world around you. The reason why I chose to study at the University of Chester was because of the City of Chester itself. Chester has an effortless combination of history and heritage, it's the 5th oldest English higher education establishment of any kind, pre-dating all but Oxford, Cambridge, London and Durham, the student population is small, it's well located, and the University is entwined with the success and future of the city of Chester! Why wouldn't you want to be a part of it?
